Parks, open space and natural areas are essential to ecological survival

Green spaces improve air quality - removing carbon dioxide, sulphur dioxide, and other pollutants from the air

Protecting land from development (keeping it as open space) mitigates against potential environmental disaster (flooding, slip zone, aquifer depletion)

Outdoor recreation is one of the best approaches to environmental education - a key to long-term sustainability

Green space protects habitat, biodiversity and ecological integrity

Trail and pathway systems save energy and protect air quality by encouraging non-motorized transportation

Arts/culture is one of the best ways to express the spirituality of the land, thereby encouraging stewardship ethics
